A method for high throughput characterization of samples is disclosed. According to the method, a library of samples is exposed to one or more electric fields to determine properties of the samples.