Acknowledgements and Thanks

I would like to sincerely thank my supervisors, Dr Mark Limmer and Professor Jennie Popay for all of the advice, support and guidance that it took to get me to this stage. While Jennie was always on hand, my day to day supervision fell on the shoulders of Mark. He has my eternal gratitude for beating me relentlessly with theory as he led an essentially quantitative person through a qualitative PhD.

I would also like to thank my institution and my line manager, Dr Jane Day, for her continued support through the research process and for providing me the time to get my thesis written; without this I would probably still be preparing the introduction.

This work would not have been possible without the help of the men who shared their intimate stories with me. Although marginalised for their engagement in sex tourism, each showed me more kindness and generosity than I could ever have expected. None of you will probably ever see this thesis, but thank you.

Finally, I would like to thank my wife and family for putting up with my jaunts to Thailand, late nights, missing weekends and general absenteeism. I'm sure that it will be strange for them to have me back.
